A Frost Enhanced Landscape

ESP_042895_2495

HIRISE
HIGH RESOLUTION IMAGING SCIENCE EXPERIMENT
UAHIRISE.ORG

THE UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA

The sediments that were deposited within this crater have since formed polygonal cracks due to repeated cycles of freezing and thawing. The process of polygon formation is common at these polar latitudes, but polygons are not always as striking as they are here. In this image, the polygons have been highlighted by persistent frost in the cracks.