

A South Polar Pit or an Impact Crater?

ESP_049972_0930

We see many shallow pits here in the Southern hemisphere, in the bright residual cap of carbon dioxide ice (also called “Swiss cheese terrain”). There is also a deeper, circular formation that penetrates through the ice and dust. This might be an impact crater or it could be a collapse pit.

