

Patterns Unique, Yet Familiar

ESP_050391_0955

HIRISE
HIGH RESOLUTION IMAGING
SCIENCE EXPERIMENT
UAHIRISE.ORG

The so-called Swiss cheese terrain, referencing the numerous holes of the region, is a product of seasonal exchange between the surface and the Martian atmosphere. With a predominantly carbon dioxide content at 98 percent, the colder temperatures condense the gas out of the atmosphere to produce dry ice.

LPL
Lunar & Planetary Laboratory

