

Wavy-Looking Layers in the North Polar Layered Deposits

These layers near the North Pole of Mars probably record global climate changes, similar to ice ages on Earth. They appear wavy here either because flat-lying layers have been eroded into shallow valleys and ridges, or because the layers are not horizontal.