

Nested Craters

Impact craters that are only a few kilometers in size on Mars usually have simple bowl shaped interiors with craters in weaker material being larger than craters in stronger material. Occasionally though, nature is more complicated and these simple rules don't apply. One such case is shown here where it appears as if there are craters nested within each other.