

Frosted Gully Landforms

Gullies like these are mostly found in the mid-latitudes, between 30-50 degrees north or south. In the Martian winter, frost (mostly carbon dioxide) can build up in the gullies, especially on the cold slopes that face the pole. The bright, bluish (enhanced-color) frost can be clearly seen in the upper alcoves of gullies here.