

A Small, Double-Ringed Crater

This small, 230-meter crater formed by the impact of an asteroid onto a lobate flow deposit on Mars. These deposits are surmised to have formed by the flow of glacial material on the surface of the planet. Ground-penetrating radar data from SHARAD, the radar sounder aboard MRO, show that a large abundance of ice is under the surface.