A New Gully Channel in Terra Sirenum

HiRISE has discovered many examples of activity in these gullies, likely driven by seasonal carbon dioxide (dry ice) frost. Images to look for such changes have been key targets for HiRISE in recent years, as we seek to understand the full range of surface processes that are active today.