

Channel in the Cerberus Palus Region

This image shows the end of a small channel near Athabasca Valles on Mars. Athabasca is an example of a Martian "outflow channel", likely carved by a massive flood of groundwater. However, it is now coated with a thin veneer of lava, following a massive volcanic eruption that flowed down the channel.