

A South Polar Pit or an Impact Crater?

We see many shallow pits here in the Southern hemisphere, in the bright residual cap of carbon dioxide ice (also called "Swiss cheese terrain"). There is also a deeper, circular formation that penetrates through the ice and dust. This might be an impact crater or it could be a collapse pit.

uahirise.org/ESP_049972_0930

