

Active Flows on Steep Slopes in Ganges Chasma

This image covers a steep west-facing slope in southwestern Ganges Chasma, north of the larger canyons of Valles Marineris. We see two distinct flow deposits: lobate flows that are relatively bright, sometimes with dark fringes, and very thin brownish lines that resemble recurring slope lineae (also called “RSL”). Both flows emanate from rocky alcoves.

uahirise.org/ESP\_049981\_1710

