

Yardangs: Nature's Weathervanes

The prominent tear-shaped features in this image are erosional features called yardangs. Yardangs are composed of sand grains that have clumped together and have become more resistant to erosion than their surrounding materials. For scientists observing the Red Planet, yardangs serve as a useful indicator of regional prevailing wind direction.

uahirise.org/ESP_050420_1910

