

Dramatic Changes over the South Polar Cap

The south polar residual cap of carbon dioxide ice rapidly changes. This image was planned as an almost exact match to the illumination and viewing angles of a previous one we took in August 2009. In this image, former pits have expanded and merged, and earlier, visible patterns on the ground seem to have disappeared.

(NASA/JPL/University of Arizona)

uahirise.org/ESP_058515_0955

