

Looking for Salts on Mars

Mawrth Vallis is a place on Mars that has fascinated scientists because of the clays and other hydrated minerals detected from orbit. In this image, the enhanced black colors are most likely basaltic sands and rocks, while the green, yellow, and blue colors correspond to the different hydrated minerals. (NASA/JPL/University of Arizona, less than 1 km across.)

uahirise.org/ESP_058749_2060

