

FAINT TRACES OF DARK FLOWS

This image shows some faint traces of dark flows along the headwall of an impact crater. These are relics of seasonal recurring slope lineae (RSL) that formed on an equator-facing slope. They are not expected to be active yet, so we'll have to wait until later in the Martian spring for any changes.