

AN INVERTED CHANNEL IN FLAMMARION CRATER

In this image, an ancient river network and nearby impact craters have undergone topographic inversion. Impact craters contain round mesas within them, and the stream channel is defined by a network of ridges. Topographic inversion describes where low-lying terrain becomes elevated over time, resulting in mesas or ridges.

LPL

HIRISE

uahirise.org/ESP_089631_2065