

Exposing the Rock in Impact Craters

In this complex crater (about 44-kilometers in diameter), we see bedrock in several locations from different depths in the crust. The central uplift exposes large fragments of green-toned bedrock that possibly originated from several kilometers beneath the surface. (NASA/JPL/University of Arizona: 262 km above the surface, less than 1 km across.)

uahirise.org/ESP_057866_1670

