

Resistant Lava and Erosion

This image demonstrates the curious phenomenon called “topographic inversion.” The southern half of the picture is covered by a well-preserved lava flow. The flow stops just at the brink of descending a steep slope. Lava isn't afraid of falling, so what happened here? (NASA/JPL/University of Arizona, less than 1 km across.)

uahirise.org/ESP_058635_1940

