

Fans of Roddy Crater

ESP_033471_1580

HIRISE
HIGH RESOLUTION IMAGING
SCIENCE EXPERIMENT
UAHIRISE.ORG

LPL
Lunar & Planetary Laboratory

The fans built up over time during intense rain storms or from melting snow. Due to the strong winds on Mars, the river channels that once carried water and sediment on the fan surfaces are now standing in positive relief as raised ridges and platforms. (NASA/JPL/University of Arizona. 257 km above the surface, less than 1 km across.)

