

Recurring Slope Lineae in Coprates Chasma

ESP_034830_1670

Recurring slope lineae (RSL) may be due to active seeps of water. These dark flows are abundant along the steep slopes of ancient bedrock in Coprates Chasma. The RSL are most prominent on the bright fans at the base of the bedrock, but actually extend back into the bedrock following small channels.