

Valley Networks in the Ancient Martian Highlands

ESP_O45299_1545

The valley networks on Mars are terrains eroded by flowing water billions of years ago. In places where the bedrock is well exposed, we often see a variety of colors due to altered minerals and polygonal patterns perhaps due to wet, clay-rich deposits.