

Drag Folds in the North Polar Layered Deposits

ESP_045308_2620

This image shows what looks like drag folds, where rock layers bend (fold) before they break in a fault. However, the North Polar layered deposits are composed of ice, and this is a large scale for such a feature, compared to drag folds on Earth.