

Dune Transition in the High Southern Latitudes

ESP_049502_1080

When we venture south of -60° latitude, we see increasing signs of dune degradation, with subdued dune brinks and broad sandy aprons, rather than sharp, dune crests and distinct boundaries. This moderate-sized dune field is a good example of such.