

Curving Ridges and Pits

ESP_056311_0940

This terrain is unusual for the south polar region of Mars, with a set of curved ridges of unknown origin. Small pits are present, often concentrated on the ridges, that may have resulted from sublimation of ice. (NASA/JPL/University of Arizona: 245 km above the surface and less than 1 km across.)

