

Gullies in Galle

ESP_058196_1280

These small gullies have formed on the flanks of these hills and they have eroded back into the bedrock. Galle Crater itself is probably billions of years old, yet these gullies are likely only hundreds of thousands of years old and may even be active today. NASA/JPL/University of Arizona (less than 5 km across).

