

SEASONAL CHANGES OF POLAR MEGADUNES

This image covers a unique polar dune field during the Martian northern spring. Light-toned seasonal carbon dioxide frost and ice that accumulated over the winter still covers the majority of the surface, and is now starting to defrost and sublime in complex patterns.